Title and abstract of the doctoral thesis (within 150 words)
“The Competence in Italian L₂ of Arabic Natives in the Context of Spontaneous Learning: Linguistic Competence vs Use” This research focuses on measuring and assessing the competence achieved by Arabic speakers present in Rome, therefore speaking Italian as a second language, in the context of spontaneous learning. The research aims to verify, in a context of spontaneous learning, whether the speaker develops the set of skills to the same degree, and whether he can reach a rather advanced level of general competence in a relatively short time. Starting from the problem of language learning and after having exposed the main theories on the socio-psychological mechanisms that condition the individual in such learning, the relationship between the prevalently spontaneous learning of the Italian language as L2 and the socio-cultural conditions that characterize learners has been linguistically analyzed and commented.
